Learning from Alaska’s Framework for a Whole-School, Whole-Community Approach to Trauma-Engaged Practice

Salon E

Presenters from AASB: Timi Tullis, Associate Executive Director & Heather Coulehan, Alaska ICE Social and Emotional Learning Coordinator; co-presenters from ODE: Jeremy Wells, School Safety Specialist & Lisa Bateman, Social Emotional Learning Specialist.

Session 1: Social Emotional Learning: Building Skills to Minimize Trauma’s Impact on Learning
Understanding childhood trauma’s effects transforms our understanding of what our students need to succeed and enables schools to help break the cycle of trauma. High levels of toxic stress impact children’s brain development, impairing their ability to regulate or control their emotions, thoughts and behaviors. We will share tools that schools can use to help students learn self-regulation and to support positive brain development through a whole-school, whole-community approach.

Session 2: Co-Creating Resilient Learners
Trauma-engaged communities and schools have policies, procedures and support services that embed an understanding of trauma. Their approaches to learning and discipline are trauma shielding or trauma reducing. They are reflective and collaborative, they promote a culture of learning, and they make meaning out of the past. They are also prevention-oriented and have relational leadership. We will share how creating trauma-engaged, safe and supportive schools requires holistic change and a mindset shift for students, administrators and school staff.

Session 3: Social Emotional Learning: What is the Board’s Role?
Policy helps set the tone for our schools and ensures consistency of approach and understanding. Policies support the overall goals of education, student safety and well-being. Intentional trauma-engaged policies can help a school system and community integrate trauma-engaged practices and build social and emotional supports.

Board members who attend the Preconference will receive credit for the Leadership Institute Gold-level Educational Equity topic.

Presenter(s): Timi Tullis, Association of Alaska School Boards associate executive director; Heather Coulehan, Alaska ICE social and emotional learning coordinator; Jeremy Wells, Oregon Department of Education, school safety specialist; Lisa Bateman, social emotional learning specialist

Life, Animated: A Tale of Autism and Hidden Potential

Ron Suskind's sixth book, "Life, Animated: A Story of Sidekicks, Heroes and Autism," examines his family's 20-year journey with their youngest son, Owen. Having lost his speech at the age of 3, Owen used animated Disney movies to make sense of himself and the world. By memorizing these movies and parroting their dialogue, he learned how to communicate and express himself, prompting his family members to create elaborate stage sets to re-enact these films and "speak Disney" along with him. Owen created a method to help other parents and medical experts reach kids with autism. The Suskind motto, "Your passion is your pathway," now guides educators, therapists and parents in tapping the deep potential in all of us.

Back on Track: How Districts Benefit from a Board Improvement Plan

Salon G

Boards that govern high- and low-achieving districts behave differently. Recent research has described with precision the various board actions that can harm student achievement, as well as actions that can benefit students. Central to understanding these differences is a valid board self-assessment that can generate not only a boardsmanship report but also a board diagnostic and board improvement plan. This workshop will explain this self-assessment survey and offer suggestions.
